

GOOD CAUSE: Borallon Correctional Centre held a fun run for inmates to raise money for charity

Inmates shape up for charity

SOME 120 offenders at the high-security Borallon Correctional Centre strapped on their running shoes for charity on Friday.

Using their own money earned from working within the centre, the inmates competed in a 5km or 10km endurance course inside the perimeter and through the facility.

Centre director Scott McNairn was pleased with the success of the day.

"This fun run provides both staff and offenders with an opportunity to both get fit and maintain a healthy lifestyle, while raising vital money for a worthwhile cause," Mr McNairn said.

Time served by offenders at Borallon ranges from one to 15 years.

"Seeing staff and offenders engage in positive interaction for a valuable charity underpins what Serco Borallon is all about," Mr McNairn said.

Tom Yates, Ipswich Hospital Foundation Executive Officer visited the Centre to present the race winners with their certificates. He thanked all involved for their support.
